

CHAPTER NINE

DIY FLOWER ETIQUETTE

- Be courteous (duh).
- Don't assume your wedding planner or coordinator (or anyone for that matter) will do any of the arrangements, transportation, or clean up. If this is one of your expectations of them, you need to clearly communicate and ask if that is a part of their contract with you.
- Always ask your venue(s) the earliest time you can gain access with your flowers. Most times people setting up are able to arrive earlier than the bridal party.
- Do not assume you can use your venue's kitchen or cooler. Most times they do not allow this as they have to keep high sanitation standards in their kitchens. Ask what sink they would prefer you and your helpers use, if you need one.
- Do NOT dump buckets of water out in prominent places/planters. Look for inconspicuous areas so you don't flood their landscapes.
- Clean up after yourself. This goes without saying, but make sure you leave no trace after your floral installation or any on-site work. Do not fill the trash cans with flower trash as the venue has emptied those for YOUR guests to be able to use. You don't want them overflowing at your ceremony or reception because you filled it with floral trash. This is why we suggest using a tarp to catch all of your trash so you can roll it up, throw it in the back of the truck/car and dispose of it later in a dumpster. The trash, not the tarp!
- Communicate with your entire team. Helpers, coordinators, venue owners. People are WAY more willing to work with you, help you, open up venues for you, if you let them know what you are planning.
